The police in turn gave the names thus mentioned to the reporters. In this way the list of missing grew longer as the work of clearing out the debris progressed.

There were other reasons, too, for reporting persons as lost. One of these has been found in the case of George A. Harth, of 13 Bedford street, Newark.

It has been discovered that he sent the motice of his death to the newspapers himself. He did it in order to desert his wife and family and to throw off the polices, who wanted him for robbing one of Charles Matthews's express wagons of $16.

and plump, nerves somewhat unstrung, sufering from a satiety of notoriety and answering to the name of Lillian Russell. The finder will please communicate with Mrs. Cynthia Leonard, Lillian's mamma. No reard is offered. This is rather a serious condition of things Lillian is gone and nobody knows where. All New Yorkers have a distinct right to a knowledge of each of Miss Russell's movements. Long ago she became public property, and there is no more excuse for skipping away, as It is reported that she has done, than there would be for the similar departure of Mayor Grant, or Coroner Levy, or Inspector Byrnes. Years ago when she surreptitiously went to Europe, there was ample reason for her flight. She needed notoriety; she was a hard-working singer, struggling to attract attention; she wanted to break an annoying contract, and she was young, impetuous, with a very loving heart.

Miss Russell at the present time is a shrewd, calculating woman of business. Her little $400 per week from the Casino has never frittered away. She lived very com-fortably with her maid and her daughter, but her extravagances were few. She no longer has a reputation to make; she no longer has a contract to break, for she is engaged to sing in " La Cigale " at the Garden at a salary of $700 per week; as for her loving heart it has tained down, though gossips have been whis-at a stand down, though gossips have been whispering about her alleged infatuation for Cari Streitmann, the Vienna tenor, who is also to sing in "La Cigale."

Miss Russell closed her engagement at the Casino last Thursday, and was to have sailed for Europe on the Saile last Saturday. She tore herself away from the bleeding and lacerated Aronsons, but she did not sail. It was said that she had changed her mind and would go to Saratoga. Glowing accounts of her preparation for that fashionable resort were published, but Lillian didn't depart. She stayed quietly in town until Tuesday, and then went away to parts unknown, accompanied by one trunk containing some very pian clothes. She did not take a maid. She did not tell her mommer anything about her pians. She simply disappeared, and now she is as good as lost, for nobody known even where a telegram would reach her.

Miss Russell, it is said, hates notoriety. She is, however, wonderfully good-hearted, and, perhaps, she is willing at her own expense to advertise the Garden Theatre, where she is to appear. "La Cigale" opens in October. So Lillian has two clear months in which to work.

Where is Lillian, however? This is not asked in any expectation of an accurate answer. Would that Herr Streitmann had also disappear of from the city! The similing Carl, it must be said, saw the first performance of "Indigo" at the Casino Tuesday night, after Lillian's departure, and he was the centre of a group of animated damsels. This is a very provoking fact, but it cannot be overlooked. The bestion, therefore, which has not been sait upon, arises once moneth her than the said proportion of the lillian as tuesday in the lillian's departure, and he was the centre of a group of animated damsels. This is a very provoking fact, but it cannot be overlooked.

Tammany Gets the Liquor-Dealers' Association President.

The delegates to the Central Liquor Dealers' Association met in caucus at 52 Union square at noon to-day. Their object was to end to select a candidate for President of the As sociation, to be elected at the Convention to be held here on the 1st of next month.

Three candidates were in the field. One of

rick Divver's saloon on Park Row, and also carries on a place on his own account in Oak street. Another man who was looking for the position was John J. Martin, an adherent of Tammany Hall. The third competitor in the case was James Oliver, and he had the support of Boss McLaughlin and the Brooklyn contin-of Boss McLaughlin and the Brocklyn contingent.

A great deal of power is vested in the President of the liquor dealers, and in a political crisis that power can be used to great advantage in advancing the interests of any particular party. It is conceded on all sides that Tekulsky, who is also backed by Peter Seery, Superintendent of the Bureau of Combustibles, is the candidate of Tammany Hall.

The sentiment of many of the delegates, as expressed before the meeting convoined, was in favor of electing as Chairman some up-the-country man. Some of them were very outspicken against Tekulsky's candidacy.

There were ninety delegates present when the convention was called to order. H. G. Hoome presided.

The discussion lasted long, and was very animated.

moments it was ascertained beyond a shadow of doubt that the body in box 8 was not that or the Hebrew.

This settled the matter, and the friends of Goldschmidt acknowledged that they must have been wrong. They went through the various boxes again very carefully, and finally lectled that the body of the man in Box 47 was that of their relative.
